

Looking for some Kardashian klues

Connie Reyes

» redeye@tribune.com

"Irreconcilable differences." Those two words appear in Hollywood more often than "wedding anniversary."

Kim Kardashian is the latest culprit to use this phrase in describing why she filed for divorce from her husband of 72 days, Kris Humphries.

Well, I call unfair! Living on Earth, we are all forcibly exposed to the Kardashian world and provided more information about them than we may care to know. And now, after watching butt X-rays and intimate family feuds, we aren't given so much an explanation as to why she wants a divorce? This is worse than the NBA lockout!

I want the details. I want to know how it got to this point. I want to see snapshots of Kris on his knees pleading for another chance. I want to know what evil words were texted back and forth the day Kim decided to file.

Luckily for the world I was married last month (we're hoping to make it past Christmas!), so I have literally weeks of firsthand insight into what happens after the honeymoon. Taking some of the most common causes for divorce among couples, as listed by illinoisdivorce.com, I've come up with some elaborate theories as to why this couple didn't make it to their (golden?) three-month anniversary.

» Mental cruelty: Perhaps Kim forced Kris to actually sit down and watch an episode of her show, in which case he should be given full spousal support. More funds should be allocated if episodes of "Khloe & Lamar" were involved.

» Adultery: Supposedly men with wedding rings are a big turn-on for women. Which is why instead of a ring, I'm trying to get my husband to wear a sign that reads, "My wife will destroy you." But only when he goes out to the bars.

» Alienation of affection: It's quite common for married couples to lose the passion once the honeymoon is over. However, 72 days is hardly enough time to send out your thank-you notes, let alone have the passion fizzle out. Perhaps Kris came to bed with the trifecta of gross: long toenails, unbrushed teeth and a smelly T-shirt. Grounds for divorce? More like grounds for the death sentence.

» Physical cruelty: Maybe she knocked him over with her big butt. Did I mention you should be mature before entering into a holy union? Clearly I slipped through the crack. (Heehee ... crack.)

» Drug or alcohol addiction: Clearly Kim was on something when she said "I do." I'm sorry, but am I the only person in the world who thinks this guy looks like his teammates dribbled on his face a few times? You can't say yes to that mug without a couple of pills.

» Infection with STD: I'm not touching this one. You'll have to go to the footage for more insight.

» Conviction of a felony: Both should be put away for wasting precious TV time with that circus show of a marriage. Too many clowns, not enough entertainment.

Hopefully these theories will keep you satisfied until E! can air the divorce special. I hear Joe Jonas might make an appearance at the after-party.

CONNIE REYES IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

GG STATUS UPDATE

Where do you eat your lunch? That's what we asked RedEye readers on Facebook after contributing columnist Katie Donbavand called for a return to lunch breaks in her column Thursday. Here are some of our favorite responses.

In the summer—in my car. In the winter—at my desk.

—Katie Anne

In the cab of my garbage truck. It's much more peaceful than most restaurants at lunchtime.

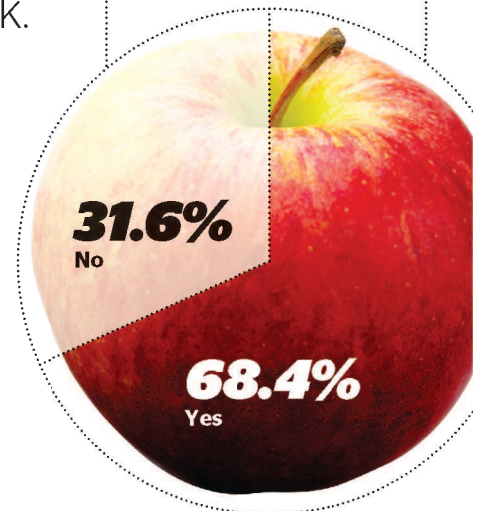

—Joe Compton

I always eat at my desk now. I can't help it, I feel unproductive if I'm having lunch without doing work at the same time.

—Bex Allen

REDEYE TEXT-IN POLL

Do you take a break from work to eat lunch?

FOLLOW US

 redeyechicago.com

 facebook.com/theredeye

 @redeyechicago

 redeye@tribune.com

FALL BACK

Good news: You get an extra hour of sleep this weekend. Daylight saving time ends Sunday, so remember to turn your (non-smartphone) clocks back one hour.